

Financial Post

presented by

Global technology, Canadian perspective

Phillips Lytle takes space in Kitchener's Communittech Hub

Drew Hasselback Aug 24, 2011 – 3:53 PM ET | Last Updated: Aug 24, 2011 3:54 PM ET

U.S. law firm Phillips Lytle LLP has opened a new office in Canada — and it's done so in a very interesting location.

Phillips Lytle has moved into a spot in the Communittech Hub, a buzzing hive of high-tech offices located in a former tannery in downtown Kitchener.

The hub is already home to 28 young high-tech firms and five very big multinationals — including a perch for Google.

Phillips Lytle, which has roots dating back to 1834, adds to the mix as the only U.S. law firm to work alongside the several other professional service firms in the building, including Gowlings, Miller Thomson and Wildeboer Dellelce. David McNamara, managing partner of Phillips Lytle, says:

“Waterloo Region is a powerhouse of start up activity. Phillips Lytle’s history with assisting innovative companies combined with our expertise in cross border legal services makes this area in Ontario a natural fit for our first office outside of the U.S.”

Posted in: Firm News, FP Tech Desk, Legal Post Tags: Communittech Hub, Lang Tannery, Phillips Lytle

DREW HASSELBACK

dhasselback@nationalpost.com